Each group should have six members, and each member will receive one map of South Asia with the time period at the top.

Using your notes, textbooks, and any other sources of information you may have, you are going to spend five minutes at a time annotating the map in front of you.

At the end of five minutes, you will pass the map to the person to your left, and you will then annotate the NEW map in front of you.
Annotation #1: Environment

- On the map in front of you, neatly indicate the extent of any political organizations or civilizations (draw the borders) which existed in this region during the time period. Borders may overlap if more than one group held the same territory during your time period.
- Label these governments or civilizations.
- Draw and label any major geographic features which are important in this region (seas, oceans, rivers, mountains, etc.).
On your new map, illustrate any major trade routes or systems of economic exchange using arrows to show the flow of goods.

Annotate your trade routes, identifying major exports and imports.

If there are any errors (or omissions) on the map from your partner before you, please correct them.
Annotation #3: Society

- Indicate any major migrations of people using dotted lines.
- Annotate your migration lines to show WHO is moving in or out, and from where.
- In the box on the lower lefthand corner, illustrate and label a social pyramid for this time period.
- Correct any errors or gaps left by previous group members.
Annotation #4: Culture

- In the box on the lower right-hand side, list the major cultural contributions and components of this period. (Consider: religions, philosophies, art, dance, literature, music, etc.)

- Illustrate the movement or disappearance of these components by drawing dashed lines to and from the points of origin.

- Again, check the previous work of your group members and make any necessary corrections.
Annotation #5: Conflict

○ On the back of your sheet, list any major threat or crisis or conflict which involved South or Southeast Asia during this time period.

○ Briefly list the causes of the trouble, and major consequences.

○ Check the work of your group members and make any necessary corrections.
Annotation #6: Impact

- Review the annotations of your group members. Correct any mistakes you see.

- Answer the three questions on the back of the map.
Putting it Together
Changes and Continuities

- Using your annotated maps, your notes, and your textbooks, work together as a group to create a change and continuity essay prompt addressing South Asia.

- Your essay prompt should focus on at least TWO periods of history in South Asia, and should address at least ONE of the PERSIA topics.

- When you think you have a good prompt, ask Ms. Galloway to check it.
You knew this was coming.

- Work together as a group to see if you can generate an acceptable thesis statement for the prompt you receive.

- Swap your prompt with another table.
